Exposition Générale

Exposition Générale foregrounds over 40 years of recent contemporary art, featuring fragments of exhibitions that have marked the programming of the Fondation Cartier pour l'art contemporain, which since its creation in 1984 has been committed to supporting artistic creation from all over the world. Mirroring the history of the institution, the exhibition highlights major themes and emblematic works of the Fondation Cartier Collection, built alongside its programming.

The title, Exposition Générale, refers to exhibitions that were organized by the Grands Magasins du Louvre department store starting in the late 19th century, in this very Haussmannian building that the Fondation Cartier now occupies, originally built for the first Parisian Exposition Universelle in 1855. These events broadened the urban cultural field and heralded a new era for the circulation of knowledge. Jean Nouvel's architectural project engages with the legacy of the building, by renewing the use of the space in a way that enables a reimagining of the possible approaches to exhibition-making. The design of the exhibition, conceived by Italian studio Formafantasma, references the material history of display systems that were used in these department store exhibitions, reactivating their social and experimental nature and exploring their influence in the evolution of museological practices.

Exposition Générale sketches an alternative map of contemporary creation that promotes a different model to that of the encyclopedic museum. It does so in four sections: an ephemeral architectural laboratory (Machines d'architecture); a reflection on living worlds and the importance of their preservation (Être nature); a space for experimentation with materials and techniques (Making Things); and a section of forward-looking narratives that blend science, technology, and fiction (Un monde réel). In addition to this thematic organization, the exhibition includes presentations of works that reveal the individual or collaborative paths of artists from the Fondation Cartier Collection.

The exhibition also extends into the immediate urban surroundings of the Fondation Cartier and engages with the neighborhood's architectural and social history. The Place du Palais-Royal and the Galerie Valois—an underground passage that once linked the subway platform to the Grands Magasins du Louvre—host artistic projects that extend the relationship between Exposition Générale and the city. Thus, the Fondation Cartier makes this exhibition a place for collective creation of new narratives, forms and knowledge in the heart of the city.

Welcome!

The Fondation Cartier pour l'art contemporain is a forum for discussion and artistic experimentation that places contemporary art in all its forms, its exhibition, and its accessibility to the public at the core of its institutional mission. Since its founding in 1984 by Alain Dominique Perrin, who was President of Cartier at that time, its activities have promoted collaboration and exchange across artistic disciplines. Built up over the course of its exhibitions, its Collection reflects the multidisciplinary and breadth of the themes it explores through its programming, in resonance with society and contemporary stakes.

The Fondation Cartier carries out its activities and commitments with the desire and ambition to make contemporary art accessible to everyone. Through its program of exhibitions and events, the Fondation Cartier creates pathways between creative spaces and fosters a genuine environment for multicultural exchange.

Its new premises, located at 2 Place du Palais-Royal in a Haussmannian building constructed in 1855, have been completely reconceived by architect Jean Nouvel. The dynamic architecture he envisioned, consisting of five mobile platforms, allows for fully adjustable spatial configurations and lighting variations, multiplying the possibilities for programming and exhibition-making. The architecture acts as a flexible system serving the institution's commitments, open to the broad spectrum of visual arts, crafts, performance and science.

Expanding its potential, the Fondation Cartier has turned this unique venue into a space for educational innovation and shared aesthetic experiences, where artists and audiences come together to open up new perspectives on contemporary art and culture.
